

neighborhood of somewhere around 7 o'clock - quarter to seven." Henry Stevens was standing very close to the approach of Brown Avenue - this is an approach that runs from Brown Ave to boardwalk about 35 feet long. He was standing on those steps or just at the foot of the steps or just at the top of the steps; the chances are it was just at the top of the steps. p. 19

After weighing fish, Henry Stevens thinks Applegate and wife and boy went down to their supper and he doesn't remember seeing them again that evening, although Applegate in his statement quite a while ago said he saw Henry Stevens on beach till 10 o'clock that night, which was very probable. p. 21

JOHNSON, George (Contractor)

Henry Stevens saw him that night on beach. Johnson claims he doesn't remember the date. He remembers being there and seeing Applegate's fish and scratching a match so that the numbers on the scales could be seen more distinctly when Henry Stevens weighed it. p. 19-21

Henry Stevens says that he has a dim recollection of George Johnson scratching a match but could not say that it was at that particular time because "I know that Arthur Applegate at some other time, either before or after, caught a bass when it was dark. It might have been at that time when Johnson struck a match to weigh that fish." Henry Stevens says there may be some confusion in Johnson's mind as to when he struck match and it might have been another night and another fish. p. 20

VAN CAMP, Mayor (and wife)

They came along and saw Henry Stevens weighing Applegate's fish. The Mayor talked to Henry Stevens on fish subjects for quite a little while that evening. Van Camp's wife stayed for while and then went home earlier than the Mayor. p. 25-26
